

Taskforce

A task manager that lives in your Gmail inbox

Sunday, 27 February 2011

Hi, it's me again, and this time I'm going to talk about a really great task management application called Taskforce for about 140 seconds. I don't make it, but I know it's creators well who live over in the States so I'm just going to show it to you quickly tonight. I want to show you how it works rather than preaching to you so I'm going to very quickly dive in. So, what is Taskforce?

1 Taskforce integrates a powerful task manager right into your Gmail web interface, putting it close at hand

Sunday, 27 February 2011

Taskforce is an extension for many popular browsers, and it simply adds an extra bit of non-intrusive UI to your Gmail interface, allowing you to manage your tasks quickly and efficiently.

2 It allows you to convert your emails into tasks and collaborate with others, even if they don't use the app themselves.

Taskforce follows a popular paradigm, allowing you to convert your emails to tasks, managing them with the application. We often get emails that tell us to do something, but this is really difficult to manage sometimes – with Taskforce, it's easy and your tasks and emails are intrinsically linked. You can add collaborators to your tasks who can work with you on them, even if they don't use the app themselves.

3 It lets you manage your workflow in the way that you want, by setting dates and delaying work as you see fit

Sunday, 27 February 2011

Taskforce lets you manage your tasks however you want, with the use of due dates and delays, meaning that you can organise yourself as you wish. Now, let's take a quick look at the app in action in Gmail.

If you like the look of Taskforce and want to try it for yourself, please do sign up using the link on screen, www.taskforceapp.com. I'm not getting anything out of doing this presentation and am just presenting it with the permission of my friends at the company to show off what I think is a great product – if you like it, I'd appreciate it if you'd tell me on Twitter (I'm @timrogers), and if not, tell me what you didn't like. All your comments will be passed onto the creators! Thanks for listening – just out of interest, could you put your hand up if you're interested in trying the app.
